For more than 166 years, Beech Acres Parenting Center has continued to grow – adapting to the evolving needs of families, expanding geographically and learning and improving through experience.

Ten years ago Beech Acres added “Parenting Center” to its name and shifted its focus.

As a parenting center, we put evidence-based practices into the hands of highly trained professionals, who then coach families in how to use them. We see and welcome each child, parent, family, and professional for whom they are. We listen to their needs, their values, and their aspirations.

By focusing on parents, and approaching families holistically, we opened a whole new world of possibilities for effecting change in Greater Cincinnati and beyond. Part of our success has been through listening to parents, partners, and public agencies to co-create programs. In recent years, global corporations like Procter & Gamble and Dell have discovered the power of co-creation, and we’ve shown it pays off for a non-profit organization as well. Our “product” is happier, more resilient, more capable, caring, contributing families. What could be worth more than that?

In the pages of our 2015 Annual Report, we invite you to join in celebrating the success we’ve experienced over ten years. We couldn’t have done it without you.

After 10 years as a parenting center, we’re still growing. By the time you read this we’ll be well into fiscal year 2016 and continuing to expand our services. We’re continuously evaluating where we may add locations, what services we might expand, or new ones we might co-create.

Thank you for growing great families with us.

If you would like to learn more about what you read here, please call Beech Acres Parenting Center at 513.231.6630, visit beechacres.org, or share with us via Facebook, Twitter, or Pinterest. We welcome the opportunity to get to know you, and perhaps co-create something amazing together!

Sincerely,

Timothy E. Stautberg

Ten years ago, in 2005, Beech Acres made the biggest shift in strategy, structure, and funding in its history... even bigger than closing the orphanage!

Beech Acres had already been serving the needs of children for more than 150 years, most of that time as an orphanage. Adding “Parenting Center” to the name signaled much more than a change in moniker. We moved our focus to parents and parenting.

The 21st century brings new and increasing challenges for parents. Child poverty, juvenile crime, and school failure are all up. The speed and uncertainty of our time compound family stress, trauma, and dissolution. Government funding for these types of problems is on the decline. We realized that our old methods were insufficient to stem the tide of family stresses.

With a more proactive approach that emphasizes strengths, we tackle families’ needs before they become problems... boosting the chances for future generations to succeed.

By addressing the needs of the whole family, we’re in a position to effect lasting systemic change. We support adults in parenting with intention—thinking ahead about their vision for their children, noting and building upon natural strengths in themselves and their children, and remaining mindful in the day-to-day work of raising kids. We’ve moved “upstream” to prevent family turmoil rather than just treat it.

That is how we’re growing great families, together.
In 2013 Hamilton County had 1,400 substantiated cases of child abuse and neglect. That's about one in every 130 kids. Rates are similar in Butler, Clermont, Clinton, and Warren counties.

Public entities like the Hamilton County Department of Job and Family Services (JFS) rely on non-profit agencies like Beech Acres Parenting Center to help them stem the tide of abuse through prevention, education, safe care, and healing. Our relationship with Hamilton County JFS goes back to the 1960s, when Beech Acres provided residential services.

In 2011, we partnered with JFS to develop our Parent Education program. Parent Education is a free series of six classes starting with the basics like discipline and managing stress. We work from the premise that all parents love their children and want what's best for them... sometimes they just don't know how to provide it, or other life circumstances get in the way.

Michelle is a mom of four who went through the program. She was eager to share her story, saying, “Beech Acres parenting classes have taught me a great deal about how to handle situations with my kids, according to their age. I learned how to make better decisions, how to use discipline. When I get angry, I can walk out of the room for a few seconds, count to ten and catch my breath. Then I can talk to my child and we can figure out a solution.”

In addition to improving her relationship with her children, the program helped Michelle find steady employment that she truly enjoys, and she’s working toward buying a home.

“Parenting means waking up every morning and seeing their faces,” she says. “I love my children, and I love being a parent. I wouldn’t trade it for the world.”

Gathering feedback from parents like Michelle is not only rewarding, it helps us adjust services as needed. We survey all participants and continuously exchange information with JFS to meet the evolving needs of the community.

In fiscal year 2015, JFS doubled the size of our contract after seeing the results we delivered over the previous four years.

Recognizing that each family comes in with their own unique set of needs, we can also offer them relationship classes, peer support, individual coaching, or case management. These other services can really enhance the lessons learned in class and maximize the results.

As we continue to experience the changing needs of our community, we’ll continue to work with JFS in Hamilton County, as well as similar agencies in Clermont, Warren, Clinton, and Butler counties, to develop effective programs. To learn more about how we’re already collaborating in each of these communities, simply visit our website or give us a call, and we’ll be glad to tell you more!
We are collaborating with mental health care agencies at the county and state levels to implement an exciting new program, Creating Lasting Family Connections.

First, we partnered with the Hamilton County Mental Health and Recovery Services Board (MHRSB) to craft the best use of a $100,000 grant from the Ohio Department of Mental Health and Addiction Services. MHRSB contributed $20,000 and, together with them and a variety of grassroots community partners, we co-created a fatherhood program from an existing, proven curriculum.

The program educates dads who are returning to family life following a separation such as prison, military deployment, or drug rehabilitation. We trained trainers, in partnership with the Council on Prevention and Education, who will in turn train other trainers, to educate these dads. As the dads reintegrate, they’ll learn parenting and life skills with potential to prevent a whole range of future problems for the children.

Linda Gallagher, Vice President for MHRSB says, “We have a long-standing relationship with Beech Acres. We’ve contracted with them to provide for the needs of children and families for years and have really relied on the good work that they do in the community.”

There is power in the union between public and non-profit agencies like Beech Acres. Government agencies have connections across the region and access to funding. Beech Acres has expertise and community trust, earned over 166 years. Together, we can reach more people and serve them more effectively than either of us could alone.

Linda continues, “Beech Acres has a real strength-based approach to children and families, and that’s been very effective. They emphasize family involvement, and they focus on outcomes.”

One dad in the program, working toward regaining custody of his two-year-old daughter, shared his experience. “One of the things I’ve learned is to be more observant and to listen to the child. Sometimes it’s hard to understand what they’re trying to say when they’re only two years old. But the thing is to listen. They might really have something important to say. It may even open up your mind to look at something from their perspective.”

Co-creating programs allows us to support families’ needs early, hopefully before unmet needs become problems. This long-range thinking stands to improve the community for all of us.

For every dollar we invest in early treatment and prevention programs, there can be a two to ten dollar savings in health costs, criminal and juvenile justice costs, educational costs, and lost productivity.
You’ve heard a lot from us over the past year about Toyota Family Learning (TFL). We’re so proud and excited to take part in this innovative multi-generational learning project, we just can’t say enough about it.

What you may not know is that a key component of TFL is family service learning. Family service learning refers to children and parents or other guardians working together to give back to their communities.

The families at Hays-Porter Elementary recognized that bullying was a pressing issue at their school, so they chose that as the focus of their project. Our educators led them through a brainstorming process, helping them figure out how they could use their strengths to address the problem.

They discovered an inspiring children’s book, “Have you Filled a Bucket Today?” by Carol McCloud and David Messing. The book encourages kids to fill one another’s “buckets” with compliments and good deeds, rather than taking from each other through hurtful behavior. The children and parents collaborated on posters to hang throughout the school, spreading the call to be a “bucket filler.” This way, all of the children in the school were touched by the message.

Through the experience, children and adults learned to tap their own creativity in order to help others. As we all know, learning to help someone else is often the best way to help ourselves.

Students at Hays-Porter show a poster they created to ask fellow students to “fill a bucket.”
This past year, our school-based services rose to new heights. Beech Acres Parenting Center is currently active in 24 schools, with a robust continuum of services ranging from parent peer support to mental health care. Finneytown Local Schools is one of our partners with unique challenges…and opportunities.

This district has been undergoing a demographic shift, and families are getting to know other families from different perspectives. Five years ago, district social worker Cathy McNair met someone who worked at Beech Acres and wondered if we could help support the diverse needs of their students and families.

Members of our behavioral health care team sat down with Cathy and others representing the district to learn more about their concerns, as well as their aspirations. Together we created a menu of services that met local families’ needs. As we’ve built a rapport with the district and the community, our relationship has deepened, and we’ve continuously expanded our services to promote social and emotional wellness.

“It’s grown exponentially each year,” says Cathy. It’s been helpful, the district reports, to have a partner who is sensitive to the differences in kids from diverse backgrounds—as well as the similarities.

Research proves that, when students have access to behavioral health, and other support services at school, they’re much more likely to get the help they need than if their parents have to take them elsewhere. “It’s great to see students establish positive relationships with adults,” Cathy notes. “Research shows that can make all the difference.”

Darren Thigpen is a Therapeutic Service Provider with Beech Acres, who grew up in Finneytown. He can relate to the kids. “We’re finding that urban and suburban kids have many of the same issues, the issues just present themselves in different ways,” Darren reflects. “We have to be able to navigate through both worlds. Families from all backgrounds use our services.”

In addition to one-on-one services, we now offer groups and crisis support, and further expansion will include training for teachers on how to respond to behavioral health issues in the classroom.

Beech Acres representatives collaborate with the school’s guidance counselors. “Having Beech Acres on site is a huge bonus for [the counselors],” says Cathy. “They share office space so there’s great communication, no phone tag.”

Most important, she has seen real changes in the kids. “I’ve seen their self-confidence improve. I’ve seen family relationships improve. The families feel like they’re included,” Cathy observes. “Everybody is so wonderful to work with. That’s what keeps us with Beech Acres.”
